GOULD S-SO. PARIS 3

Gould annexed their third straight victory Wednesday afternoon taking South Paris into camp by an 8-3 score. The locals scored three times in the first three innings without making a hit. In the next five innings they put together nine hits and three walks to score five times. South Paris scored once in the second on a hit, an error and an infield out. Then in the fourth Libby led off with a home run into the street in left and Muncie doubled. The next man hit a fierce grounder down to Swan who calmly scooped it up and threw to Clough to get Muncie sliding into third. Libby came through with his third straight hit in the sixth and scored later on another hit by Muncie and an infield out. After this Tucker seemed to get warmed up to his work and took care of the next twelve batters personally striking out ten and forcing the other two men to ground to him.

Jenks was the batting hero for Gould, coming through pinch hitting for "Billy" Robertson in the fourth and driving in players from third and second and scoring himself as Paris gave an exhibition of "throwing the ball around." Swan made some nice plays in the field and seems to have a steady influence on the entire infield. The outfield play was not up to standard. With Tucker on the mound it leaves three inexperienced men to patrol the gardens and they miss his instructions on how to play the opposing batters, etc. Billings again contributed one of his fine games behind the bat. His throwing has improved to such an extent that opposing players take few liberties on bases and when they do attempt to pilfer a sack usually end the ball there awaiting them.

The SNAPSHOT GUILD
PICTURES AT BLOSSOM TIME

Spring blossoms make an excellent setting for pictures. At blossom-time, get snaps of this sort, as well as close-ups of the blossoms themselves.

SPRING blossoms are an invitation to any camera owner, for their delicacy and freshness give them a natural appeal as picture subjects. However, to take really good blossom pictures, there are several rules you must observe.

The first rule is: get close. Don't stand away back, and picture a whole tree or a whole orchard in every shot. Take one or two general shots—then move in for closeups of the blossoms. If yours is a fixed-focus camera, or one with limited focusing range, use a portrait attachment on the lens—this will enable you to get even closer.

If you have access to a camera of the double extension bellows type, use that for blossom pictures.
With such a camera, you can shoot blossoms in their actual size—filling the film with two or three blossoms.

Choose blossoms that are properly lighted, so that the contrast of sunshine and shadow emphasizes the form of the subject. Don't let color away you, unless you are using full-color film. For black-and-white shots, especially of pink blossoms, a fine-grain panchromatic film is best.

If you shoot a group of blossoms outlined against a blue sky—and this is a very good type of blossom picture—slip a color filter on the camera lens. The filter will darken the sky, making the blossoms stand out fresh and white. To obtain a deep-toned sky, use a deep yellow G filter. For a lighter sky tone, a medium yellow K-2 filter is the one to choose.

Blossoms make an excellent setting for pictures of people—informal portrait snapshots with a fresh, springtime quality. Make a collection of such shots during blossom time, showing members of the family visiting an orchard, admiring the blossoms, and sniffing their fragrance.
You'll find many an interesting picture opportunity—and these blossom-time pictures will be welcome in your album.

Nature Builds a Bridge

Nature is making a bridge in the Kleinwals valley in the province of Vorarlberg, Austria. The "structure," which spans the Schwarzwasser river, consists of chalkstone furrowed by the rushing water. Reports received in Vienna say it has a span of 30 feet and this is growing. The arch of the bridge is carried by three pine trees which have grown into it from underneath.

THE OXFORD COUNTY UNITED PARISH NOTES

THE COMING WEEK:
Friday evening the 31st the Center Lovell Circle will hold a supper which will be followed in the town hall by a whist party sponsored by the Y. A.'s for the recently organized volunteer fire company.

This Saturday evening there will be a community supper in East Stoneham. The proceeds will go to the Red Cross to alleviate the suffering of the war victims.

Sunday will be observed as Loyalty Sunday in Lovell. The pledges toward the Church budget will be made at that time.

Monday evening, June 3, the Waterford Men's Club will try a most interesting experiment; various members will report on the several candidates for office in the coming primaries. Recognizing that any one individual had a small chance of getting any adequate line up on the candidates, and that the primaries were of first importance, this method of mutual education has been scheduled.

Tuesday night there will be a supper in North Waterford.

Wednesday the 5th is the date for the Association Meeting in Denmark. Delegates from the Churches should be elected this Sunday. In the afternoon session Deane Hodges will be examined as a candidate for ordination.

Friday, June 7th, is the ordination. The time is 7 p. m. The place is Ordination Rock which is about half a mile above the Waterford church. The choir of the Parish will unite to assist with the music. All are invited.

THE LAST WEEK: The May Parish Visitor came out while it was still May. Monday evening the Outing Club held a picnic supper at Mutiny Brook. The Lovell Pilgrim Fellowship met for supper at the Parsonage Sunday evening; this was the last meeting of the present season.

Gammon; Vice-President, L. H. Penley; Secretary, Mrs. Anna W. White; Treasurer, Mrs. Mabel A. Mann; Directors for three years, L. H. Penley, Harlan Andrews and Clarence Coffin. A directors' meeting was called for Friday night of this week.

Mrs. Mary Aldrich has moved into an apartment in F. S. Farnum's, better known as the Maple House. John Starbird and family have moved from George Jackson's rent to the downstairs rent in the Packard house on High Street.

Mrs. Celia Lamb, Ina Smith and Fannie Cummings drove to Strong last Saturday to attend a district meeting of the American Legion Auxiliary.

Mr. and Mrs. C. J. Cummings and Cummings and Cathryn attended Carolyn and Mr. and Mrs. A. R. a birthday dinner in honor of Gerald Davis' birthday at South Woodstock Sunday. It was their eighth annual get-together.

Several members of the American Legion and its Auxiliary attended special Memorial services at Locke Mills last Sunday evening. They took Rev. Mrs. Norton, who is nurse at George Jackson's, with them. She is the regular preacher there.

In contrast to the troubled times was the peaceful atmosphere that reigned in the gymnasium Friday evening at the Junior-Senior Prom. The low hanging ceiling with the many silver stars, which shone under the spot light, and the trellised sides with their rose arbor entrances made a beautiful setting for the gay young folks in the rainbow colored gowns swinging to the smooth rhythm, and showed much effort and time spent by the pupils and teachers of our High School. Helmi Cummings sang "If I Had My Way" by special request. Home made ice cream and cookies were on sale.

Norwood looked at Lynn and made a restraining gesture. Runduha stared; he looked astonished. The Maharajah stood up. Norwood spoke:

"Lynn, did Runduha tell you that I tore up your letter? He lied. Your aunt gave it to me less than an hour ago. It reached her by mistake in the wrong envelope."

"I confirm that," said the Resident.

Lynn stood up and waited for Runduha to speak. He didn't.

"Runduha," she said, "did you hear that?" Then, turning, "Thank you, Captain Norwood."

"Just a moment," said Norwood. "I will explain it later."

Lynn shook her head. Her eyes met his but she made no reply. She left the room by the door behind the screen. The Maharajah followed her. Silence.

The Resident wiped his face with the handkerchief. "Steady, Norwood," he said. "Steady. He spoke about to the Maharajah."

"Does Your Highness wish?"

"I wish for tranquillity! I do not care to hear any more."

"Garry on!" said the Resident. "Careful!"

Norwood turned the goblet, this time in his right hand. "You don't deserve this, Runduha. You're a blackguard!" He glared at the Resident. "You ought to be!"

The Resident nodded. The Maharajah stared, frustrated. Norwood spilled the contents of the goblet on the floor.

"Have you spoiled the rug?" asked the Maharajah. "That is a very good rug."

The kneeling servant crawled and used his own white turban as a mop. The Maharajah turned to Runduha.

"Leave the room. Never return!" Runduha moved toward the door behind the screen, but the Resident jumped out of his chair. Runduha began to hurry. Norwood was too quick. He seized the screen in Runduha's way. It banged against the door and the noise almost made the Maharajah scream.

"Your Highness," said the Resident, "I have the honor to inform you that I have written to the Maharajah's advisers to advise them regarding the matter of Prince Runduha's succession to the throne of Runduha."

"You have already written?"

"I have mailed the letter."

"I am glad that you have done so."

"You and your wife may go to the devil!"

"May I speak to Your Highness alone?" asked the Resident.

The Maharajah stood at Runduha. "Go out that door!" He pointed to the door behind the screen.

Runduha walked out. Norwood followed. He overtook Runduha at the head of the stairs, and Runduha turned about and faced him.

"I sincerely regret," he remarked, looking straight into Norwood's eyes, "that the men who stood at you, mistook."

"Yes, you had rotten luck, Runduha. What did you do—go to Europe? The Riviera? That's crowded with might have been who mistook me hitting below the belt. If you know, Runduha, if I had even suspected you of having put one over on Lynn Harding, I would have let you hang. You know, they hang even princes who play at your game." He laughed. "No, Runduha, no. You will walk ahead of me down the stairs. I know that trick."

At the foot of the stairs, Norwood pulled out his cardcase, produced a card and gave it to one of the palace servants.

"Send it up to Miss Lynn Harding. Say I will be waiting outside."

I will meet her near the front steps."

He walked out. Under the glare of the portico light he pulled out his handkerchief, raised his right arm and waved it.

O'Leary's shrill whistle answered: long-short, long-short—"Order received and executed—okay!"

O'Leary had released the Bengali doctor.

CHAPTER XXII

Lynn looked like a ghost in white chiffon. She turned instinctively to the right and stepped into the darkness. She stood within a few paces of the spot where, one night ago, she had bridled at Norwood's blunt comments. It seemed as if a whole lifetime had passed in the interval. The guitar and the songs on the wall were a far-off memory.

Norwood strode out of the darkness. "Silence!" he said. "Not a word. Nothing so easy on the nerves as saying nothing."

They continued walking until they came to a moonlit lotus pond and stood together staring at the reflection.

ned in the carriage. When I saw you on horseback in the early morning, it was all over as far as I'm concerned—nothing further to argue about. I've committed myself to the bit. How about you?"

Lynn caught her breath. "I—I never dreamt of it!"

"I know you didn't. And you're not dreaming now. We're both of us stone-cold sober and wide awake."

"Do you always make love like this?"

"I don't even know the first rules of the game. I'm a chronic bachelor, suddenly converted."

"But Captain Norwood—"

"The only girl I ever fell in love with calls me Carl or else calls the police."

"But—" Lynn laughed. "Are there any police?"

"Try. Shout for them. An Indian night is as full of eyes as the sky is of stars."

"But I wouldn't know what to say to the police. I'd better call you Carl."

"And now to use one of your phrases, let's get this over with: I'm a pauper. I've four hundred pounds a year and an Engineer Captain's pay."

"Carl, I hope you don't think I'm wealthy. I haven't a cent in the world. I've been disinherited."

"You have? Is that an actual fact?"

"Yes. Auntie hasn't even left me a reputation."

"That's marvelous! Oh, my God, what luxury! I was scared stiff."

"You? Scared?"

"Yes. Scared of you. Afraid you'd think I was after your money."

"Carl, I haven't a cent."

"All right. More preliminaries. Mostly I live in a tent. My servants are scandalous rogues, who know nearly as much as I do about crime and treachery and worse."

Lynn laughed. "I never lived in a tent, and I've been kept away from sinners. I'm a very innocent person. You'd better think again, hadn't you?"

"No. I've finished thinking about that. But how about you? It's your last chance. Lynn, you're on the edge of the abyss of matrimony. Any questions?"

"Millions of questions! But don't I don't even know you. I'll ask them afterwards."

"Good. That's the style. There'll be lots of time afterwards. Well, you've returned to call the police, and you've promised not to talk back or make a scene. So I'll be damned if I'll wait any longer. Lynn, I love you."

The Indian night and the Indian stars, the performed silence and the moonlit lotus pond all merged into a consciousness of love—one moment of eternity that swept away the past—one moment of unselfishness in which the lover and the loved were one and all life was their realm, all values were in true perspective. Love was real. Everything else was illusion and unreal. Until gradually, even to Carl Norwood's arms, Lynn's awareness of earth returned to its spell and she looked away at their reflections in the moonlit lotus pond.

"Look, Carl. See me look!"

"Shadow!" Then he spoke strangely: "Shadow of reflection that reflect what? You and I are shadows. We move in response to something else. What is it?"

"Carl are you real? Is that you talking?"

"I suspect it's the real me talking to the real you. Lynn, I'm steeped in eastern thought. Life's good. We're growing—getting wiser gradually. That's why I spared Runduha. He'd have been hanged if I hadn't done what I did. Now he'll get some money from the Maharajah and live in Europe."

"But Carl—" Lynn hesitated. "Perhaps I shouldn't say it."

"All right, I'll say it for you. He'll go to Europe and do it again. And lots of women won't have sense enough to stand him off until he's ruined them and sneered and gone."

"Yes, I was thinking of that. It was a mean thought."

"No. It wasn't."

"The way I thought it, it was mean. Carl, I believe you because I can't disbelieve you, not for any other reason. It seems impossible. How can such a man as you are, with such thoughts as you think, possibly love me? I believe I deliberately tempted Runduha. The Maharajah—"

Norwood chuckled. "All right, I'll say that for you, too. She said he really loved you. He'd be a fool if he didn't. The trouble is, he is a fool. So it won't last. Not that it makes any difference."

"But if I've made him wretched—"

"That's his business. Each of us pays for his own mistakes."

"Carl, I'm shameless. I really am. I'd forgotten Auntie."

"Did you ever have toothache? One forgets that, too, afterwards."

"But this isn't afterwards. You don't know Auntie. Carl, I'll go to her. You mustn't come. Please, really, you mustn't. She will say things that I don't want you to hear. They're not true but she'll say them."

"Are you sure?"

"You mean, am I sure they're not true?"

"I mean, are you sure she'll say them?"

"Yes. She always does when she's angry."

"Let's find out."

"Carl, I'm—"

"You're embarrassed. So'm I. It's good for both of us, so let's do it together."

They took their time, strolling along shadowy moonlit paths toward the guesthouse, too interested in each other to notice voices until they were quite close up beneath the darkness of the overhanging trees.

The trunks no longer stood in a row on the garden path. There was a light in the servants' pantry at the rear, and a smell of cooking. Light poured through the living-room window.

"Hush," said Norwood. "Listen. Rule number one is don't talk in the dark. Rule number two is listen and learn, but never tell tales."

The Maharajah's voice came quite distinctly through the open window: "If I, who am broken-hearted, can forgive my nephew Runduha—"

An unmistakable voice interrupted: "You're being silly. Don't be sentimental. You probably ruined Runduha by being sentimental. At your age you ought to know better. You should have spanked him when he was young, and kept him short of pocket money when he was older. I intended to spank Lynn. That's the trouble and I'm ashamed of myself. Are you sure you know where she is? Are you quite sure? What did you do to her near the lotus pond with Captain Norwood?"

"See servant," said the Maharajah, "and one garden. Also the Chief of Police very kindly took the trouble to phone me about it."

"Imagine the impudence of that girl!"

"But I haven't noticed that she is impudent."

"If she was in love with Captain Norwood she should have told me."

"Do you think she knew it?" asked the Maharajah. "I knew it, late this evening. But do you think that Lynn knew it?"

Auntie Harding chuckled a chair-woman's ladylike laugh on two notes, politely derisive.

"Knew it?" Maharajah, what this younger generation knows is more than you and I ever will know. They're incorrigible. That girl has more whallop in her will than there are cents in a dollar. It isn't brittle. You can't break it. It's resilient."

"Yes," said the Maharajah, "this generation has its own ideas. It sees its own way. Lynn will go far."

Auntie coughed drily. "Go far? She will go to the devil, I don't doubt. But I have this consolation. If what you say is true, she has disgraced herself with the only gentleman I have met in India."

"The Maharajah protested loyally: 'His Highness my husband—'"

"Oh, kings don't count," said Auntie. "They're middle class nowadays. I can't forgive kings for the way they've sold out to the politicians. I never will forgive them. I'm a Democrat and I'll die in my boots."

"But you'll forgive Lynn?"

"Getting back at me, are you? A little sarcasm, eh? Maharajah, if I can get that mix Lynn to forgive me before she has had time to slander me to Captain Norwood, I'll think I'm lucky. I'll be a wizard—or is it a witch?"

"Or are you a little wiser than you were?" the Maharajah suggested.

Norwood whispered: "How much did you bet? Are you still scared?"

Moses Lafayette O'Leary's whistle piped from the nearby shrubbery a few notes of a private signal: C, D, F—C, D, F—C, D, F—C. It startled Lynn.

"What was that? It sounded like someone in hiding. Are we being watched?"

"Yes, the night has eyes in India. They're a saying here that even diamonds see in the dark. That's a very rough diamond informing me that all's clear and he's off home. You go in. I'll follow you presently. I want to speak to him."

Norwood walked alone into the shrubbery. He almost walked into Moses O'Leary.

"I warned you," said O'Leary, "about women. By the hundred they're all right. One's a problem. But you wouldn't listen. I suppose you'll get yourself a new man now to say yes to you and tell you you're Solomon. But Solomon had him a thousand wives, and concubines on top of that. So put that in your pipe and smoke it. Am I out of a job?"

"Where's your horse?"

"Tain't a horse. I rode your baby mare. She's near the gate."

"When you get back to camp see that she's rubbed down carefully and give her a light blanket. Stand by and see it done. Do you hear me?"

"Yes, sir, Captain Norwood."

"Here's the key to the whiskey. Help yourself. You've leave of absence until noon tomorrow. Turn up sober or I'll—"

"Is the Government broke?"

"Here are ten rupees. But that's not Government money. It's personal. Don't get into trouble with it."

"Well, sir, I've seen miracles in my day. I've seen you pick winners. Maybe she's as reliable as she is good looking. Here's hoping. I'll say a prayer for you."

"Don't keep that mare standing. Good night."

"Good night, sir, and here's hoping."

Moses Lafayette O'Leary strode away into the night, until the sound of his footfall ceased on the dusty path and there was nothing more heard of him but the tune that he whistled.

Oh, what a night! And what a day! But poor Lynn! What a day!

SUNDAY: Mr. Duke and Mr. Manter will exchange pulpits. Mr. Duke will preach at Newry at 10:00, at Upton at 11:15 and at Sunday River at 7:00 p. m. Mr. Manter will preach at Errol at 10:30, at Magalloway at 3:00 and at Wilton's Mills at 7:30.

WEDNESDAY: The Older Young People's Group will meet in Upton at 8:00 p. m.

A very encouraging Annual Meeting of the Larger Parish was held last Tuesday at the Magalloway Church. Plans were suggested for four meetings of the Ladies of the Parish a year. The summer plans of the Parish were laid before the meeting with the Young People's Camp, Camp Crystal, on July 22-23, the coming of the summer student, Mr. Henry S. Harvey of the Union Theological School, the four vacation schools at Newry, Upton, Errol and Magalloway. More Council Meetings were suggested. The Treasurer's Report showed that the Parish was in good financial standing and free of any debt.

We regret that it poured so hard on Tuesday, preventing those who were not able to come from enjoying the fine time had by all at the Men's Club's Ladies' Night at the Bear River Grange. The Newry people served a remarkably fine supper after which followed an address by Superintendent Rev. Rodney W. Roundy of Portland. A very enjoyable social hour followed after which all went home anxious to come again to the next Ladies' Night.

AT TO QUIZ No. 2

Answers
1. I leave the clutch in and up the brakes carefully. When driving on slippery roads you should always drive at a speed which makes braking unnecessary. If you must stop or slow down do so gradually touching the brakes lightly and intermittently, and always keeping the car in gear.
2. In the direction you are skidding. Your object is to "straighten out" the car and this is the way to do it. Be careful, however, not to turn the steering wheel too far. As the car straightens out, you should again straighten out the front wheels.
3. I slow down and cross at as wide an angle as possible. Trying to cross tracks or ruts from a parallel position is almost certain to cause a dangerous skid.

"Ancient and modern mesmerism, clairvoyance, and hypnotism," denounced, is the subject of the Lesson-Sermon that will be read in all churches of Christ, Scientist, throughout the world, on Sunday, June 2.

The Golden Text is: "Sing unto the Lord, praise ye the Lord: for he hath delivered the soul of the poor from the hand of evil-doers." Jeremiah 20:13.

The citations from the Bible include the following passages: "From whence come wars and fightings among you? come they not hence, even of your lusts that war in your members? Ye lust, and have not: ye kill, and desire to have, and cannot obtain: ye fight and war, yet ye have not, because ye ask not. Ye ask, and receive not, because ye ask amiss, that ye may consume it upon your lusts." (James 4: 1-3).

The Lesson-Sermon also includes passages from the Christian Science textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," by Mary Baker Eddy.

FLORENCE CARTER TIBBETTS

In the passing of Florence Carter Tibbetts, on May 19, Bethel lost one of her best loved daughters. A loss that a large number of friends and acquaintances in this vicinity share with many others in Portland, Maine, where she has lived the last twenty-five years.

The loss is greater when an earthly life ceases if that life has been a fully-lived, richly endowed one as it was in this instance. It is by no means unusual that a loved one passes on who is valuable to and cherished by the immediate family. If, however, the personal worth and sphere of helpful service is not restricted to one's own then there is proportionately more to regret and more to remember.

As one looks back to childhood days there is a compelling memory of her bright and gallant spirit, her unfailing good-humor, her friendliness for all without regard to degree or age-limit. It was just impossible for "Ollie" to be downhearted. What an enviable gift it is, that of keeping cheerful when the world looks dark! In later life her natural humor combined with rare tactfulness proved a valuable asset in her association with people.

To her vivid, warm personality was added a distinguished poise and graciousness. One of her most prominent characteristics was the approachableness and ease with which she met people. She raised no barriers in social contacts. She met others more than half way. There are probably but few fortunately endowed mortals who are capable of projecting themselves into the lives of others. This Florence could do. She understood the viewpoint from the other angle. Thus she was enabled to give an assistance that was of unusual value not only for the benefit of her family but also those whom she met in her journey through life. As one friend expressed it, she "loved her for her dear, understanding heart." There are many such friends bereft of her genuine friendship.

She possessed a taste for the highest forms of literature and music and an appreciation for all the finer things in life. We always felt she could choose the best instinctively. In addition to her musical talent, as if Nature could not confine her endowment in one direction, there was a distinct aptitude for composition, for she wrote with charming ease and discernment, using her pen often for the benefit of others.

Her childhood and school days seemed inseparably cherished by her and she retained a fond interest in the welfare of Gould Academy.

Born of a large family, any member of which could lift up a voice in song, Florence was endowed with possibly more than her share of musical talent. Throughout her youth the gift of song in itself gave her a prominent place in our village life and she used her talent generously and unaltingly.

Her marriage was a markedly happy one. It was a union wherein harmony prevailed and was unmarred by bickering or dissension. To its success she contributed a sweet, equable disposition, a sense of fairness, and a rich companionship.

To her nieces she was much more than an aunt and her influence in their lives was significant for a wholly unselfish and intelligent interest. Already their lives are richer for her devoted, ambitious efforts in relation to their welfare and the development of their talents. It can be truthfully said that she lived her life for others. In a closely united family whose members never relinquished their love of the hearthstone nor loosened the tie of kindred affection, this parting becomes especially poignant.

Choosing for a vocation the teaching of the deaf she became proficient in that difficult and taxing field. The years which she spent in teaching in New York State and North Carolina served to broaden an already brilliant personality. Even an outsider could discern the importance of her association with the Maine School for the Deaf over a period of nearly twenty-five years. To the dealing with unusual pupils and the solving of trying situations she gave special assistance and valuable advice.

She was a member of the Cathedral Church of Saint Luke in Portland. She was also a member of a rather unusual woman's organization, the Ninety and Nine Club, which is devoted to practical charity. Independent of that activity she has taken a kindly interest in unfortunates among neighbors and acquaintances. To quote from a recent letter which is more nearly an epitome of the real estimate of her life than anything else could be: "We think of her kindly spirit, her constant helpfulness, the purposefulness of her life and her interest in so many good and useful activities in our community. She put her life into the lives of others and that for good."

Her own dear ones can well say, "This radiant spirit was ours for a brief time; there is left for us the privilege of being proud of her memory."

A great consolation and one that tends to soften the pangs of parting with a loved one in May-time is the realization that nothing is ever completely lost, that while the physical body is laid aside the influence of a personality continues to live. Anything that ever has been, still is. And love is everlasting.

Miss Arlene Greenleaf was at home from the New England Conservatory of Music, Boston, to spend the week end with her parents, Dr. and Mrs. S. S. Greenleaf.

PLEASANT VALLEY GRANGE

Pleasant Valley Grange met Tuesday evening with an attendance of 65, twenty-two of its own members and forty-three visitors from Franklin Grange of Bryant Pond.

The third and fourth degrees were conferred on two candidates by the ladies degree team of Franklin Grange. The work was carried out in a very able and impressive manner.

An invitation was read and accepted from Bear River Grange to meet with them on June 8 when the State Lecturer, Hartley Stewart, will be present. Worthy Deputy Davis invited our members to meet with Franklin Grange on June 22 when they will be privileged to hear Lecturer James C. Farmer of the National Grange.

The literary program consisted of remarks by W. M. Everett Davis of Franklin Grange, an original poem by Bertha Mundt reviewing the first and second degree work of our previous meeting, and an interesting talk by Worthy Deputy Ellis Davis.

After the work of the evening a delicious supper of hot scallop dishes, baked beans, pies, cake and coffee was served by the committee in charge, Doris Lord, Bertha Mundt, Edmund Smith and Leland Mason.
